“A Tuna Christmas” Brings Holiday Hilarity to Cape May Stage

Called "a unique Yuletide tale full of laughter, heart, and a whole lot of shenanigans," by DC Theater Arts, this comedic holiday play delivers some serious Christmas magic.

“A Tuna Christmas” follows the Yuletide festivities of the delightfully eccentric cast of characters in the third smallest town in Texas. With twenty-two different characters, dozens of costume changes, and just two actors, this play is a fun-filled, satirical look inside the workings of a small town during the holidays. Written by Jaston Williams, Joe Sears, and Ed Howard, and directed by Roy Steinberg, this XX play runs from November 15th to December 30th, with performances Wednesdays through Saturday nights at 7pm, and Sundays at 3pm.

Featuring professional Equity actors Nathan Rothrock and Dane Agostinis, “A Tuna Christmas” introduces the audience to the eccentric residents of a quirky town called Tuna, Texas. Together Rothrock and Agostinis combine to play memorable characters such as two country-fried radio DJ's, a pair of sassy Tastee Kreme waitresses, a gravel-voiced gun shop owner, a high-strung community theatre director, a charming juvenile delinquent, a pretentious society matron, a soft-hearted humane society director, a goofball soft drink delivery man, a goofy road crew worker, an eccentric chicken farmer and a dozen more.

“Both actors are particularly adept at quickly drawing a sketch of a character while exploring in more depth the complications of those characters that are more developed in the story,” explained Cape May Stage’s Producing Artistic Director Roy Steinberg.
